Countplus has launched a Harvard Business School Scholarship honouring its founder, Barry Lambert.

The accountancy-based financial services firm announced that the principal of accountancy firm, Cooper Reeves, David Reeves was the inaugural recipient of the scholarship, which is intended to acknowledge Lambert's contribution to the financial services sector over the past 50 years.

Commenting on the scholarship, Countplus chief executive, Matthew Rowe said that with Lambert's impending retirement, the company believed the scholarship represented a way of honouring his legacy.
